

EACHRIGHTS SEALS PARTNERSHIP DEAL WITH THE UNIVERSITY OF STIRLING

As the East African Centre for Human Rights, (EACHRights), we are pleased to announce our recent strategic partnership with the University of Stirling, Scotland. The University of Stirling was founded by the Royal Charter in 1967. In 2020, the university was rated 5-star in the QS world university rankings.

“The East African Centre for Human Rights (EACHRights), considers Partnership Development as a core aspect of our 2019-2023 Strategic Plan. We have signed an MoU on Internship Partnership with the University of Stirling and it will serve to be one of our many strategic & meaningful relationships beyond the East African Region. We believe that the internship experience will nurture the very much needed change catalysts in the Economic, Social and Cultural (ECOSOC) rights space.”

DR. JUDITH OLOO - CEO, EACHRights

As we gladly welcome this partnership which will see the first cohort of interns join our organization this and every other September, this engagement stands to reflect our commitment to Partnership Development.

The collaboration will ensure the fulfillment of coursework objectives for the university’s MSc in Human Rights & Diplomacy students. But most importantly, it will also give the students a chance to be informed human rights workers through relevant training and substantive legal exposure.

As a leading Non-Governmental Organization (NGO) in the Human Rights space within the East African region & beyond, we have a history of meaningful partnerships with various stakeholders like the government and the Civil Society Organizations (CSOs).

The Stirling partnership reveals that which is core in what we do, and that is pouring ourselves into the realization of Economic, Social and Cultural (ECOSOC) rights as we build relationships that matter and which will empower our partners to be the much-needed change catalysts in the human rights space.

As EACHRights, we remain committed to fostering the right partnerships with the right partners, as we always have.
